

Resilient livelihoods

Transforming communities with equal opportunities for work

Elizabeth Mwende Mutua proudly shows the goat she received from Alongside Hope partner Anglican Development Services - Eastern (ADS-E) in Kenya. The goat provides a source of income and improves nutrition for Mutua and her family.

"My hens are very pretty, behave well and are already starting to lay their first eggs." Learning to raise chickens and develop a business selling eggs "is giving a new light of hope" in her home.

Alongside livelihoods

In communities worldwide, climate change, conflict and economic instability make it hard for people to earn an income. Alongside Hope partners are able to support livestock programs, where goats, chickens, cows and other animals can improve nutrition by producing milk or eggs, as well as meat. Surplus protein items or livestock manure can also be sold to increase income, which provides stability and financial strength for the farmers. Many programs also provide instruction in beekeeping, which benefits farmers who can sell honey and supports plant pollination. Agricultural programs teach farmers to use climate-smart techniques that improve their incomes.
